The Railroad jubilee : an account of the celebration commemorative of the opening of railroad communication

In view of the above facts, and in conformity with the expressed wishes of many of the citizens of Boston, the City Government propose to celebrate the completion of these lines of railways, by a festival in Fanenil Hall, and other appropriate ceremonies. The inherent weakness of the government, the vigour and eloquence of his opposition, and a series of military disasters abroad combined to rouse a public feeling of indignation which could not be withstood, and in December 1756 Pitt, who now sat for Okehampton, became secretary of state, and leader of the Commons under the premiership of the duke of Devonshire. The northern states would not allow another slave state.

It is ascertained, from the actual results of this year's business, that under favorable circumstances, all kinds of provisions can be brought from the West, through these new lines of communication, to Boston, more speedily and at a less expense than to any other Atlantic port. His bearing was in the highest degree frank, courteous and manly.
