They included , the foreign minister from 1898 to 1905; , in London, 1890—1920; , in Washington from 1902 to 1924; and Camille Barrère, in Rome from 1897 to 1924.

Liberalism and radicalism in France

The danger of a Bonapartist restoration changed completely the political situation in the country. France lost Alsace and most of Lorraine, and had to pay a cash indemnity to the new nation of Germany.

French Third Republic

Another theory put forth is that the low rate of French population growth, relative to Germany, was due to a lower French birth rate perhaps due to the provision under French Revolutionary law that land must be divided up among all the sons or a large compensation paid — this led peasants to not want more than one son.
