Vulpus and appeared in Rinaldo Rinaldini, der Räuberhauptmann 1799-1801 and its two sequels and a stage version. A textualist judge, he is privy to what the founding fathers truly meant in the Constitution; he often calls upon them to support his arch-conservative agenda. They eventually meet and fall in love, and he tries to help her find her people, but she is the last of her kind, and she ends up being burned alive by the Indians who had befriended Abel.

In The Telling, efforts to preserve the library at Silong involve combating an enemy that represents several contemporary spheres of power — state, corporation, media propaganda, economics — all combined into a single enemy. It is in that struggle between optimism and pessimism, dramatized by these narratives and others like them, that we can begin to do the critical work of ecological transformation.
