When he was come to man's estate, and had become one of the King's nobles fidalgo , charged with important commissions, the King gave him many times occasion to discuss in his presence and before the whole Court about the things of our Holy Law against the highest and wisest Moors in the King's entourage. Is not their example worthy of emulation and an incentive to follow in their footsteps and to embrace the life of husbandry with a zeal like theirs? A practice of this sort, therefore, led to immediate gain, but rarely to desirable reputation.
