Saving the Gola Forest: reimagining forest conservation in West Africa

The first chapter explores ways through which SFM can be facilitated to grow on the continent. Although this method may seem inefficient and looks a muddle, it saves labour and land and limits soil erosion by keeping the ground covered.

Saving Africa's forests, the 'lungs of the world'

Although regional in scope and design, WA BiCC focuses on targeted geographical areas within the region to improve governance and policies that strengthen the conservation of critical ecosystems and the well-being of the people that depend on these ecosystems. The intervention aims to protect an estimated 200,000 ha forest within the Sapo National Park in Liberia, to help mitigate climate change and boost agricultural production in the southeast region of the country.

Land Use and Land Cover Trends in West Africa

They are made up of private forests and protected forests in reserves or animal parks. There are also likely to be adverse effects on food security for the host communities as more emphasis will be placed on cultivating what will quickly bring income than on what really has nutritional value. Our investigations indicate that the hub for the illegal rosewood export trade in Nigeria is Sagamu, in Ogun State although increasingly some activity is springing up in the Ikorodu axis.

West & Central Africa

Weaving together a complex narrative and rich variety of voices, Harry Gamble explores the high stakes of colonial education. In Sudan, famine had affected close to about 20-25 million people with 3% month death rate. A further impact that will disproportionately affect women is the fact that when forests are cleared to cultivate feedstock, access to non-timber forest products is reduced, which the livelihoods of many women and their families depend on.
