A Christian Science perspective on vaccination and public health

The conflict about the heliocentric system belonged, theoretically speaking, to the first case, and Darwinism, in its gross form, to the second; practically, however, disputed questions generally turn up in the third case, and so it was actually with the heliocentric system at the time of, Kepler, and. Yet the objection is only apparent.

Catholicism and Science

If the Earth were moving, then its motion relative to the stars should have been detected. We also have the explicit Catholic teaching that faith and reason are not opposed but rather complementary, and that scientific reasoning and faith are mutually enriching. The contest involved predicting the length of a shadow that would pass over the imperial gnomon, which was a sundial in the Forbidden City.

What the story of Galileo gets wrong about the church and science
