Guide 8: Group Performance and Decision Making

It indicates that seven 7 is the optimal size.

Group vs. Individuals

Extreme members and group polarization.

Group Decision

And the status of the group members can also be important. Brainstorming does not provide a problem solution or decision itself. The clinical team decides to implement best practice by means of a clinical guideline.

Techniques of Group Decision Making (with example)

As a result, relevant information or opinions are likely to remain unshared because some individuals never or rarely participate in the discussion. During the 6 months of the guideline development meetings, the group moves from the individually, but tacitly, held belief that being sensitive to user preferences in deciding treatment is a good thing towards individualized preference elicitation in the form of structured questions to ask each service user at each initial consultation but stopping short of formal economic methodology.
