Canadian Council of Forest Ministers Committed to Climate Change Science

The first study analysing the potential impacts of future climate change on terrestrial ecosystems was published in 1985 Emanuel et al. Groce, 2015: The cold-water climate shield: Delineating refugia for preserving salmonid fishes through the 21st century.

Canadian Forest Management and Climate Change

Analyses of the last 100 years of climate data for the coterminous United States suggest that the average temperature has risen by 0. Our ability to predict the occurrence of fires and hurricanes has benefited from research that allows managers to focus their attention on sites most likely to be disturbed.
