Dystopia and Science Fiction

Starring Jake Gyllenhaal, Jena Malone, Mary McDonnell, Katharine Ross, Maggie Gyllenhaal, James Duval, Drew Barrymore, and Patrick Swayze. .

Remake/Remodel: La jetée (1962) vs. 12 Monkeys (1995)

The presence of a stern, powerful and dysfunctional government is the main focus in the film. Standing along that melancholy tideland. At the same time, it is important to note that there is a distinctive feature in the scenes depicting both the high class society and the working class, lighting-wise.

It's a miracle that Terry Gilliam's Time Bandits even got made

That film is La jetée 1962 , one of the strangest and most heartfelt science fiction movies ever made. In the end, we agreed on a picture book at £1. As the two films go on, their stories diverge somewhat.

John Cleese on Monty Python and Political Correctness

The technology was exposed in the film to be faulty as its mistake led to the murder of an innocent man. The film runs for 28 minutes and is in black and white.

Quay Brothers Collection

Indeed, Burgess went onto write his own dystopian homage to Nineteen Eighty-Four, which he titled 1985, that featured a Britain dominated by trade unions and where Islam had become the dominant political force. Days passed and it became obvious that Rochefort would never be able to come back: production was stopped, insurance companies and the completion bond company stepped in and the movie was officially abandoned... Lost in La Mancha shows Gilliam gradually becoming a tragic figure, fighting to keep his movie going against all odds, and ultimately failing.

John Cleese on Monty Python and Political Correctness

One day, Craig enters a small door hidden behind a filing cabinet and finds himself in the mind of actor John Malkovich; able to observe and sense whatever Malkovich does for fifteen minutes before he is ejected and dropped into a ditch near the New Jersey Turnpike. Dystopias have often been most successful as literature when they have incorporated humor.

Arch 443

Gilliam started reading the novel and writing his script in 1991, and with every year that passed, he became more aware that he had only filmed a few of the many movies he had in mind.
