By the time the Japanese attacked, most of the doctors and nurses working in them had left Nanking. Dredged up to respond to this need were atrocities allegedly committed by Japanese military personnel in Nanking four years earlier. A general policy direction for the expulsion was given by Prime Minister McKenzie King on August 4, 1944, at the House of Commons, Parliament of Canada.

Less than one-third of the surrounded enemy survived our attack. He even recruited me to be a last-minute contributor to his Festschrift.

The 1950s: Pax Americana and Japan's Postwar Resurgence

Tonimoto was firmly committed to combining gold and silver on the surface of porcelain, as evidenced by his decadeslong search for the right technology to do so. Since Chinese troops were determined to make their last stand there, people feared that the original residents and the new ones refugees would become victims of the hostilities. Still, they kept coming, gradually making inroads into even remote areas.
