Rapport

Put the other person at their ease.

Rapport

Reflecting back and clarifying what has been said are useful tactics for repeating what has been communicated by the other person. Talk about established shared experiences, the weather, how you travelled to where you are. See our page for more information.

Trusteer

This usually means being welcoming, relaxed and open. Make sure the other person feels included but not interrogated during initial conversations. Source: Chambers English Dictionary, 1989 edition.

Trusteer

Helpful Rapport Building Behaviours There are certain behaviours that are particularly helpful in building rapport. It is much easier to stick to the weather, the last speaker, and travel arrangements than risk falling out over politics. For information on how to reference correctly please see our page on.

Rapport Synonyms, Rapport Antonyms

We tend to vary our voices, pitch, volume and pace to make what we are saying more interesting, but it also has an effect on how we come across. The rapport created, however, can last for many years. Building rapport is the process of establishing that connection.

IBM Trusteer Rapport

It is much easier to build rapport with someone who is very like you, or who shares a lot of your interests. Find links between common experiences. This will help both of you to feel more relaxed and communicate more effectively.

Rapport

Employers are more likely to employ somebody who they believe will get on well with their current staff.
