REPORT on the GEOLOGY and MINERAL POTENTIAL

Geochronology and geochemistry of the Badaguan porphyry Cu—Mo deposit in Derbugan metallogenic belt of the NE China, and their geological significances.

Lithogeochemistry of hypogene, supergene and leached cap samples, berg porphyry copper deposit, British Columbia

. Acknowledgments Mineral discovery and prefeasibility projects are always the products of successful teamwork. S i m i l a r to explosive b r e c c i a t i o n , the mechanism is possibly adequate to explain c e r t a i n fractures proximal to b r e c c i a bodies but i s inadequate to explain the very widespread and l a t e development of f r a c t u r e cleavage at Berg deposit.

REPORT on the GEOLOGY and MINERAL POTENTIAL

At shallow depths where sheet f r a c t u r i n g is most Intense, anhydrite i s t o t a l l y hydrated to gypsum. Heat flow models are imprecise and allow great latitude in determinations of conductive heat flow.

MINFILE Mineral Inventory

Since 2001 several research studies have been carried out on the GPCB, but they focused mainly on petrology, geochemistry, isotopic geochemistry, and geochronology of the porphyry rocks related to mineralization Hou et al. . .
