To the extent that they examine modernist subjectivity, Proust and Woolf articulate an anxiety about the separation of self and world which leads to an attempted recuperation of the integrated orders depicted by Montaigne.

Dialectic of Self and Other (Michael Eldred)

If this were not so, there is nothing we could have ever done in our entire lifetimes to make ourselves different than we are—a consequence, I believe, that is incompatible with our being at least to some degree ultimately responsible for what we are. Yet they are not two separate persons. As other Caribbean writings reveal, the remembrance of the Caribs suggests another, possibly more provocative association with the cannibalistic act itself.

The dialectic of selfhood

This truth was obtained by them when they watched themselves acting in the world and changing it.
