But his making Thomas dress backwards — and resolving that, if necessary, he shall be the author of Hornchild, as well as Sir Tristrem — may perhaps remind the reader of Don Quixote's method of re- pairing the headpiece which, as originally constructed, one blow had sufficed to demolish : — ' Not altogether approving of his having broken it to pieces with so ' much ease, to secure himself from the like danger for the future, he made it over again, fencing it with small bars of iron within, in such a manner, that he rested satisfied of its strength — and, without caring to make afresh experiment on it, he approved and looked upon it as a most excellent helmet' EUis having made some observations on Scott's article upon Godwin's Life of Chaucer, which implied a notion that he had formed a regular connexion 152 SIR TRISTREM— 1804 with the Edinburgh Review, he in the same letter says — ' I quite agree with you as to the general con- duct of the Review, which savours more of a wish to display than to instruct ; but as essays, many of the articles are invaluable, and the principal con- ductor is a man of very acute and universal talent. I had armed myself with all the resolution I could, with the thought of their crimes and of the danger past, and was assisted by the sight of the Marquis of Lothian in weepers for his son who fell at Culloden--but the first appearance of the prisoners shocked me! In every controversy, accordingly, he resorted to the plea which suited his immediate purpose, without troubling himself in the least about consistency; and thus he scarcely ever failed to find what, to persons of short memories and scanty information, seemed to be a justification for what he wanted to do.
