Also where I place a particular affection, I love extraordinarily and constantly, yet not fondly, but soberly and observingly, not to hang about them as a trouble, but to wait upon them as a servant: but this affection will take no root, but where I think or find merit, and have leave both from divine and moral laws. Yea, though they should loose their lives in this action, yet might they have comforte in the same, and their endeavors would be honourable. Yet there is room within this intimacy or identity, it would seem, for disagreement.
