Third Estate

The lower clergy and some nobles and upper clergy eventually sided with the third estate, and the king was forced to yield. That there shall be established in all towns and country houses commissions of arbitration, composed of a certain number of citizens elected and renewed annually, to which persons may apply and secure provisional judgment, without expense, except in case of appeal to the regular courts. The division in estates was of mixed nature: traditional, occupational, as well as formal: for example, voting in was carried out by estates.
