Jose Miguez Bonino, Doing Theology in a Revolutionary Situation, Confrontation Books, Philadelphia, 1975.

The conflict with Satan and the powers of this world, the condemnation of the rich, the insistence that the kingdom of God is for the poor, and the locating of his ministry among the poor--these and other features of the career of Jesus show that his work was directed to the oppressed for the purpose of their liberation. Evangelicalism is characterized by an ecumenical spirit.

But, when we consider the fact that our insatiable demand for goods and services, all at the least possible cost, has demanded the exploitation of countless millions of people around the world, only then can we begin to understand the worldview from which this theology of liberation is developing.

Doing Theology in a Revolutionary Situation by José Miguez Bonino

Most church historians see the founding father of neo-orthodoxy as Karl Barth. Jose Miguez Bonino, Doing Theology in a Revolutionary Situation, Confrontation Books, Philadelphia, 1975. The Magisterium of the Church As a general rule, the magisterium watches the development of new theologies with close attention but rarely intervenes and then only with great caution and discreet support or opposition.

Cone on why God is never color-blind: Secondly, in a racist society, God is never color-blind. Black theology looked for relief from social oppression where Latin theology sought refuge from economic oppression.
