Dickerson influenced Jones at many levels. When infants see an adult, they often respond with a smile that begins small and slowly grows into a radiant grin that makes the adult feel at center of the universe. As we studied these stories, we found that they not only told us how individual leaders are shaped but also pointed to some characteristics that seem common to all leaders—characteristics that were formed, or at least exposed, in the crucible.

They argue that if presidents were not able to command some considerable level of security in their tenures, their would be worthless. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, for instance, attributes much of his success to his interaction with a splendid mentor. In addition, this reduces accountability by allowing the president and the legislature to shift blame to each other.
