Plato, Phaedrus, section 274c

Socrates retorts that he is still in awe, and claims to be able to make an even better speech than Lysias on the same subject. Be sure to vote so your favorite Phaedrus saying won't fall to the bottom of the list.

Phaedrus Estate

The present speech, however, is by Stesichorus, son of Euphemus Man of Pious Speech from Himera Town of Desire. Socrates tells a brief legend, critically commenting on the gift of writing from the god to King , who was to disperse Theuth's gifts to the people of Egypt.

Phaedrus Study Guide

The solution was disseminated in the English speaking world by Baerwald a few years later, in 1941².

Phaedrus

Socrates, baring his head, vows to undergo a rite of purification as a follower of the , and proceeds to give a speech praising the lover.

Plato's dialogues

As this occurs over and over, the bad horse eventually becomes obedient and finally dies of fright when seeing the boy's face, allowing the lover's soul to follow the boy in reverence and awe. After this, Plato spent time traveling around the Mediterranean before settling down in Athens to write and establish his Academy, the predecessor of the modern university; Aristotle became his most famous student. Socrates himself challenges his listeners to provide such defense at 84c-d.

Phaedrus (dialogue)

The Ontological Difference says beings are always characterized through a definite constitution of Being Seinsverfassung. Caught between these two feelings, the lover is in utmost anguish, with the boy the only doctor for the pain. The narrator applies the name Phaedrus to the consciousness that occupied his body before he experienced a psychotic break while studying ancient philosophy at the University of Chicago.

Phaedrus Quotes by Plato

Thus the two terms of love and madness re-emerge at this point in the dialogue. .
