The Report of the Committee of Inquiry into Human Fertilisation and Embryology (1984), by Mary Warnock and the Committee of Inquiry into Human Fertilisation and Embryology

The Commission waited several years to launch infringement procedures against those Member States that have not put in place effective market surveillance on pollutant emissions from vehicles and national systems of penalties for infringements of EU law as required by the existing legislation. It suggests a testing protocol for defeat devices to assist Member States in detecting potential defeat devices by testing vehicles under non-predictable variations of the standard testing conditions.

The enforcement powers of the Commission are limited to initiating infringement procedures against Member States where a Member State has failed to apply EU law correctly. The choice of the technical service is primarily the choice of the car manufacturer, and the role of the type-approval authority is often just to validate the procedure at the end. Appendix C details the hearings, requests for documents, studies, fact-finding missions and other activities undertaken by the committee to collect the evidence necessary for the fulfilment of its inquiry mandate.

REPORT on the inquiry into emission measurements in the automotive sector

The Commission should have acted to mitigate the central role played by the overrepresented industry representatives in the work of the RDE-LDV working group, who constantly delayed its work by re-opening topics that were considered clarified or even decided upon. This is six years later than originally planned and three years later with respect to the timing proposed in the Commission CARS 2020 communication of 8 November 2012.

Apart from the principle of sincere cooperation between institutions laid down in Article 4 3 TFEU, the main tools at the disposal of the committee of inquiry to overcome these problems were political and media pressure. The data on the Euro 5a diesel vehicle concerned were also part of a JRC report on eco-innovation, published in 2013, and in principle available to all Commission officials. These are public authorities at the national or subnational level, usually also in charge of general product safety.
