The House of The Prophet or The Mosque o

His other writings are still in manuscript form. The authors, both men of third century, chronicled the history of Makkah from the Jāhiliyyah until their own time.

The House of The Prophet or The Mosque o

This is difficult, however, owing to the problematic nature, sometimes total absence, of archaeological evidence: some of these earliest mosques were made of ephemeral materials, and most repeatedly altered or utterly superseded by more spacious ones to accommodate the continually escalating numbers of congregants. Islamic culture is represented by a variety of architectural types: religious, domestic, military, funerary, etc. The family of Āl-Fahd has produced scholars of renown in the field of ḥadīth, who have followed in the footsteps of their great ancestor, the chronicler of Makkah, Muḥammad b.
